

FCC,

I received your e-mail today regarding the possibility of imposing a lower federal law regarding telephone privacy. Now, in Indiana, our Secretary of State has imposed a "no call" list. For the last year, I have not received a single annoying telemarketer call!!! For the federal government to step in and take this action away is completely ridiculous. While I understand that charities and the such utilize random digit dialing, I should be able to choose who I give my hard-earned money to and who I would like to be solicited from. I still give money to these groups (and will continue to do so) without receiving a call from them. Why would I decide not to now?

I already receive an incredible amount of "junk mail." Why add to this problem? As a staunch Republican, this action is a liberal's attempt to add more red tape and step into the lives of citizens further. Why waste time with this issue when other issues require greater attention.

The Indiana no-call list is one of the greatest programs to be initiated in many years within the state. The federal government should not intervene with this program.

Here's a tip, let's give all telemarketer's the FCCs number so they can bother you day in and day out. Let's see how much work you get done on a daily basis.
